

Spotlight

We ran to some bushes, I supermanned right in. I got pricked by a thistle. I was brave and brought Portia into a little dip surrounded by bush. It was like a battleground. It had sticks, bush, logs and some wire. We were safe from the brightness of light.

Lara came with a buddy and a torch. She tried to trick us by yelling "spotlight!" Portia and I giggled under our breath. Some more spotlighters came to get the last people. Four finders circled us, not spotting a thing.

Mr Russek's whistle blew loud and clear.

"We won", I yelled, as we skipped down the hill.

I held my breath as a beam of light shone over my head. I felt like I was in the darkest corner of space. I couldn't see anything. I regretted not eating enough carrots and cucumbers for dinner.

Kayaking

I was standing in the glistening blue water. The kayak was wobbling beside me. I put one foot in then another. I sat down. I struggled to keep my balance then I stopped wobbling. I put one paddle in the water and then another. I started to move forward as fast as a tortoise. But I was still pleased with myself.

I began to get the hang of it. I entered the deep water. I stopped and peered down. Below me shiny sprats were darting around. I turned the canoe and sped down the light and dark blue line. It felt like I was going as fast as a speed boat.
